Demand Continues to Grow, Services Offered Increase

This was another challenging year for many of our neighbors. In 2010 situational poverty -- driven by high unemployment, a difficult economy and scarce resources -- led to longer lines at the Food Bank. Though we saw many new faces each month, we also saw the same families returning, needing our help for longer periods of time.

The Food Bank continues to find new ways to better serve our community and expand outreach programs. The Satellite Food Bank system added two locations, one in rural Thurston County and the other in Lacey. The Gleaning Program, combined with our Olympia Kiwanis Community Garden partnership, brought in more fresh produce for clients than ever before.

Children's services grew in many areas. The Forkids Program, our school weekend backpack meal program, now serves 1,200 children each week. The Summer Meal Program expanded its Mobile Meals from one route to two routes, feeding 250 children daily by summer's end. It provides sack lunches much like an ice cream truck, traveling from location to location and reaching children where they live and play. New to the Food Bank was the School Garden Project program which already has a strong presence at Madison Elementary and is beginning at Garfield Elementary.

Organizationally the biggest change was introducing the Client Choice Model (shopping model). It was also the largest client focused success of the last few years. A lot of work went into implementing this change. Everything from a space analysis of the current building to remodeling the building's interior to maximizing storage space. It required new shelving, new racks and new equipment. Volunteer jobs and responsibilities changed. New volunteers were recruited...and things just look different!

One of our goals for the Client Choice Model was to create a more open and engaging space. We wanted to increase client-volunteer interaction and eliminate walls, both virtual and real. It also increases client dignity allowing them to select for themselves the food they need, within given parameters. One of the biggest, less obvious benefits is less wasted food. Clients only take what they feel they can use, making better use of our limited resources.

The Food Bank is a community resource, supported by the members of our community dedicated to helping our neighbors. It is this spirit of community that makes it possible for us to help so many...your gifts of time, food and cash are our greatest resource.

Our sincere thanks. We could not help so many without each of you.

Summary
The number of people receiving assistance from the Thurston County Food Bank continues to increase dramatically. Our demand for services has gone up by 20%. The biggest change in 2010 was the increased number of visits, basically families needing to use our services for longer periods of time. We saw a 10% increase in the number of larger families accessing services, with their need most noticeable during the holidays.

Giving in general was flat. Our cash donations were comparable to 2009 and remained steady through the year. However in-kind giving, particularly through food drives, saw a decline.
